Nos Aldermānus & camerarii Gilde seu fratnitatis i honore diue Marie virginis i ecclia sãcti Botulphi de Boston Lincoln dioc. Anno dni MCCCCXXII [1522] Impressum per me Richardū Pynsonū regiū Impressorem. Oblong, measuring $8\frac{1}{4} \times 11\frac{5}{8}$ inches, the initial U containing a woodcut of the Virgin and Child, the rest of the first word printed from a wood block, white on black ; with remains of seal. £85.

AN EXCEEDINGLY RARE SPECIMEN OF PYNSON'S PRINTING on VELLUM. Only one other copy of this remarkable printed form is known.—that in the British Museum. This Guild was a very interesting example of a Mediæval Guild, for though it consisted largely of the merchants and traders of the city of Boston, much of its constitution still remained of an ecclesiastical nature, at a time when the Guilds in larger cities had become limited to particular callings and were mainly secular in character. This form recites some of the privileges of the Guild and also that the Guild undertook the support of seven priests, twelve choir boys and thirteen beadsmen ; from its accounts it appears also to have maintained a Grammar School. By the indulgences obtained from successive popes the Guild was allowed to have their own Confessor, who could relax for them the severe rules of diet in Lent, and also, brethren and sisters of the confraternity who resorted to the chapel of Our Lady in St. Botolph's Church at the great festivals had pardon no less than if they themselves had visited the stations of Rome. Fox in his Book of Martyrs tells an interesting story how a renewal and extension of these privileges had been gained from the Pope about 1510 by no less a person than Thomas Cromwell. One Geoffrey Chambers was commissioned by the Guild to visit Rome for the purpose of obtaining a renewal of old and some additional privilege from his Holiness, and on his journey he met with Cromwell whose aid he invoked. Cromwell contrived to waylay the Pope on his return from hunting. "Approached him with his English presents, brought in with a three man's song (as we call it), in the English tongue, and after the English fashion. The Pope suddenly marvelling at the strangeness of the song . . . willed them to be called in. Cromwell there shewing his obedience, and offering his gelly junkets, such as kings and princes, said he, and the realme of England vie to feed upon, desired the same to be accepted in benevolent part." After the Pope had tasted the sweetmeats, he immediately granted the petition of the Boston Guild.

Besides the chapel of Our Lady in the Church of St. Botolph, the Guild also had a Guild Hall of their own in South Street, which was surrendered to the first Mayor of Boston in 1546. It was used by the Corporation for their meetings up to 1835. From the inventory of the goods of the guild made in 1534, it is clear that it was very wealthy. The total weight of its jewels and silver and gold vessels was 1028 ounces. Many books are named in the inventory.

This form, which is signed by Robert Tallboys, is made out in favour of Wylleam Noryes and Ellena his wife.

- 22 CALAMY (Edmund), A Caveat against New Prophets, in Two Sermons at the Merchants Lecture in Salters Hall, on Jan. the 6th. and Jan. the 20th. 1707. London, Printed by T. Ilive. 1708. 8vo, a beautifully fresh copy in contemporary red morocco, the sides with gilt tooled panels surrounded by floral ornaments, gilt back, gilt edges, £3 3s.

This volume is prefaced by a remarkable and plain-spoken address to John Lacy, who had been one of the wealthiest members of the nonconformist congregation at Westminster to which Calamy was minister. Lacy had however fallen under the influence of the so-called "French prophets" who arrived in England about 1706, and started prophesying in so sensational a manner that there was much popular excitement, and soon there were nearly 400 persons prophesying in different parts of the country. The book of Calamy probably had a considerable effect in checking the spread of these delusions, but Lacy still continued his prophetic out-pourings, though as time went on his followers diminished.
